New Dublin Exhibition remembers Irish First World War dead

Naming the dead has a powerful resonance for those left behind; we put names on gravestones and monuments, in death notices and on memorial cards. Now Dubliners can visit a moving work remembering and listing the names of all of the Irish war dead who fell on Belgium soil in the First World War.

A large memorial book, Assembly, records 174,000 soldiers' names and forms the central part of a new exhibit from the In Flanders Fields Museum in Belgium, now on display in Ireland for the first time. Along with an oversize book of the names of the war dead, the installation consists of five chairs (representing each year of the war).

The exhibit will be in on view in Dublin at different locations - City Hall, Dame Street and Richmond Barracks, Inchicore.

Assembly Memorial Chairs has been curated by artist Val Carmen for the In Flanders Fields Museum. Val has a particular interest in loss and memorials to the war dead and has been shepherding this work around various locations since 2014, the centenary of the start of the First World War.

Assembly Memorial Chairs is on display as follows:

City Hall, Dame Street from 1st to 29th April

Richmond Barracks, Inchicore from 13th to 26th
May
